Alexander Dunlop Lindsay was born in Glasgow 14 May, 1879, the third child of the Rev. Thomas Martin Lindsay and Anna, daughter of Alexander Dunlop. After graduating from Glasgow University he won the first scholarship at University College, Oxford, where he was president of the Union and obtained firsts in classical moderations and literae humaniores. After a single term at Corsock Inn, studying Hebrew, with a view to entering the Church, Lindsay returned to Oxford, and in 1906 was offered a tutorial fellowship at Balliol. In 1907 he married a student at Somerville, Erica Violet, daughter of Francis Storr, 'a classical scholar of repute', by whom he had a daughter and two sons.

Lindsay served with labour battalions during the First World War, reaching the rank of Lieutenant Colonel. He returned from France determined to develop his academic work in the field of adult education, particularly with the Oxford tutorial classes and the W.E.A.. At the same time, almost inevitably, he was drawn into affairs in Ireland, and in 1921 he went to Dublin as an observer, with, amongst others, Walter Moberly, staying at the house of Horace Plunkett. In 1922 he obtained the chair of Moral Philosophy at Glasgow, which he occupied until 1924, when he went back to Balliol as Master. Between 1935 and 1938 he was Vice-Chancellor of Oxford University, and in October 1938 he stood as a Progressive Independent candidate, supported by the Labour Party, in the Oxford City by-election. He was defeated, but his venture into politics was not insignificant.

When war came with Germany, Lindsay was appointed chairman of the Oxford Joint Recruiting Board, which, along with many other activities, almost worked him to death. These included radio broadcasts, writing, a long trip to America, adult education work, and organising Nuffield College. In 1944 he collapsed with a strained heart, and although told that his active life was probably over, he made a marked recovery. After the war the teaching staff at Balliol was greatly depleted and many new Fellows were elected. Lindsay continued as Master.

In 1945 he accepted a peerage and became Lord Lindsay of Birker, taking his title from Birker Moor, Low Ground, in the Lake District. The following year he went to America to lecture, and to receive an honorary LL.D. from Princeton. At this time, too, he was deeply involved in the reformation of the German universities; and through his interest in Germany he formed connections with Wilton Park. In 1947 he was asked if he would be Principal of St. Catharine's Foundation, in Windsor Great Park, but declined.

Lindsay was seventy when he retired from Balliol. He had already become involved in the proposal to set up a new university which, after much discussion and argument, came into being as the University College of North Staffordshire, later the University of Keele. The Lindsays took up residence at Keele when Lindsay became its first Principal, but overworked by the preparations he was taken ill in the summer of 1950, and once again made a speedy, though not complete, recovery. The College was formally opened by the Queen, 17 April 1951. Less than twelve months later, on 18 March 1952, Lindsay died, and was buried in Cumberland, near to 'Heather and clear streams'.

Lindsay's papers, together with a number of those of his forbears, were presented to the University of Keele by his daughter, Lady Scott, in 1971. In accordance with her wishes the arrangement of the majority of the papers, in envelopes and box files, has been preserved. On this basis, as far as possible, the material has been listed in chronological order.
