

SUSTAINABILITY INTERN (SUSTAINABLE LIVING PROJECTS) (Casual Contract)

Environment and Sustainability activities at Keele

Since 2011 sustainability has been embedded at the heart of the institution's mission, with one of six of the University's overarching Strategic Aims – 'to promote environmental sustainability in all that we do'. Keele is committed to embedding a 'deep green' sustainability ethos throughout all of its operations and activities with the aim of becoming an internationally-recognised sustainability leader within the Higher Education sector.

Since 2011 Sustainability has been one of the key themes running through our approach to education, with the aim of all undergraduate and postgraduate programmes embedding this throughout their curricula, and ensuring that sustainability is also entwined in co-curriculum opportunities and the wider student experience. The University has a multi-stranded Education for Sustainability strategy which covers the specific sustainability degrees and modules, as well as the embedding of sustainability throughout programmes, and the provision of co-curriculum sustainability opportunities and significant emphasis on staff development, as well as partnership working across the University and Students' Union, and plans for a sustainability elective stream. The University has made strategic investment into supporting the embedding of sustainability into the curriculum and student experience, through the appointment of a Director of Education for Sustainability since 2012, and a full-time Sustainability Project Officer role since 2017. Keele has an established and award-winning reputation due to its whole institution approach to embedding sustainability into the curriculum and student experience. In 2018 Keele was 13th overall globally out of 719 universities as part of the UI Green Metric World Ranking, as well as winning two prestigious Green Gown Awards, one for Outstanding Leadership Team of the Year due to our distributed responsibility and leadership approach to sustainability.

In 2018 Keele launched the Institute for Sustainable Futures, a cross-university research institute aimed at enhancing and disseminating the sustainability-related research carried out within the University. This Institute is structured around six 'sustainability challenge' areas which are closely aligned with the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals. The University also has a significant energy transition agenda, with major energy infrastructure projects such as the Smart Energy Network Demonstrator, HyDeploy@Keele, and on-campus low carbon generation projects. As well as improving the sustainability of the campus, and contributing to the university's sustainability research agenda, these projects also have potential to be a major part of student's sustainability learning at Keele through the curriculum, co-curriculum and hidden curriculum, and related 'Living Lab' approach, leading to a more energy and sustainability literate campus community.

This sustainability activity is underpinned by significant sustainability expertise across the university, with sustainability-focussed degree programmes such as the interdisciplinary undergraduate programme BSc Environment and Sustainability, and the interdisciplinary MSc in Environmental Sustainability and Green Technology, as well as 96% of the university's undergraduate programmes embedding sustainability in some form. In addition, there are sustainability-focussed free elective modules available to all first year students such as 'Greening Business' and 'Global Warming'. We have also run highly successful sustainability internship schemes and have considerable expertise in environment and sustainability outreach to business, schools, schoolteachers and the wider public, often hosted at the Keele University Sustainability Hub.

The new Sustainability Intern role will support activities and projects in the formal, informal and hidden curricula as part of Keele's objectives to be one of the UK's leading sustainability-conscious campus communities.

1. Job Outline

The new Sustainability Intern (Sustainable Living Projects) post has been created to assist the Director of Education for Sustainability, Sustainability Project Officer and Environmental Manager in embedding sustainability within the co-curriculum through the wider student and staff experience, particularly focusing around sustainable living-related projects. The post is available immediately and is a part-time role on a rolling casual contract (up to 10 hours per week).

The Sustainability Intern (Sustainable Living Projects) will support the Education for Sustainability team and wider Sustainability Team in delivering the University's Education for Sustainability strategy and wider sustainability objectives, and will be involved in a wide range of activities including facilitating sustainability events for students and staff, assisting with sustainability projects, and supporting and promoting events and workshops. The Sustainability Intern (Sustainable Living Projects) will assist in the development and dissemination of promotional material for the marketing and communication of sustainability education activities, as well as assisting in project evaluation and dissemination activities. The Sustainability Intern (Sustainable Living Projects) will also assist with organising sustainability events in the co-curriculum such as an annual Green Festival, Exam Plus and Induction events and assist in liaising with other key stakeholders such as the Students' Union, Keele Postgraduate Association, Estates and Development, as well as student groups and societies.

The Sustainability Intern (Sustainable Living Projects) role will link to sustainable living-related projects on campus including energy and waste reduction in Halls, the Great Donate halls move out scheme, Coffee Cup scheme, Sustainability Halls rep programme and more.

Applications are welcome from individuals studying at Keele who have a background knowledge and commitment to the environment and sustainability agenda, and who have the willingness to contribute to a range of sustainability projects working closely with students and staff. Candidates with previous experience of organising and delivering events, organising volunteer groups, and creating promotional and communications materials and using social media for promotional activities will be welcomed. The successful candidate will be expected to demonstrate initiative and the ability to work independently, as well as being able to work as part of a team, and will have excellent communication, interpersonal, networking and organisational skills, and IT skills.
